Program Strategy: Keeping Kids Safe and Productive

Program Summary:

As a continued element of the progressive discipline matrix in Duval County Public Schools, the ATOSS program will provide an alternative to the current out-of-school suspension model as a way to keep suspended juveniles in a structured and supervised environment during the school day. It is believed that the program will help reduce crime in neighborhoods by keeping local youth engaged in an academic setting, and improve educational and behavioral outcomes including on-time graduation and overall academic readiness.

Program Overall Status:

The ATOSS program has been running in Duval County Public Schools for more than a decade. The sites allow for student removal from main school for egregious conduct or pattern of behavior that is disruptive to teachers and other students. At the three ATOSS Centers managed by the district, assigned students meet with a social worker as part of a social-emotional element to the program, while a certificated teacher works with students on their academics through either on-line programming and/or course work sent by the school. Social-emotional development is addressed through practices associated with restorative justice as a way to build awareness and repair harm to the community (e.g., classroom, peer group, school, or neighborhood). This is conducted through social circles, character education, and general counseling. When students are in their last day of the ATOSS program, they meet with the social worker to assess for any support services that might be necessary/helpful for when the student returns to the home school. The social worker creates a plan if needed, and reaches out to the appropriate school staff to ensure that services are provided; the social worker will also follow up.

In December of 2016, of the 89 students projected to attend the program, 70 students enrolled at St. Paul Missionary Baptist Church ATOSS site. For the month, there were a total of 119 seats utilized during the 16 school days for an average of 5.4 participating students per day. This represents 3% of possible seats, but 17 percentage points below minimum usage agreement (60%).

Successes: 1) Student participation in the ATOSS program has positively impacted the student's daily attendance as they are not marked absent when participating in the program. 2) Students that participate in the program get exposure to targeted interventions as a way to address their behavioral needs. 3) Schools can better track academic progress when students stay engaged in the learning process through either direct instruction or online assignments.

Challenges: 1) Ensuring that schools send current class assignments for students participating in the ATOSS program. 2) Ensuring that the action codes for suspensions are consistently entered and or corrected into the Student Information System (FOCUS). 3) Coordinating and ensuring follow-up/transition services between school and district-based staff.
